PRINCE'S DISCOVERY REVIVES INTEREST IN OLD PICTURE

When the Prince of Wales recently discovered an old score book in a cupboard in St. James' Palace which recorded the only known appearance of King Edward in a cricket match, interest in the above picture was revived. This photograph, which hangs in the pavilion at Lord's Cricket Grounds, London, was taken when King Edward (then Prince of Wales) played for Essex against the Gentlemen of Norfolk. The Prince was known not to be adept at the game, and the spectators hoped that Wright, the opposing bowler, would favor the Prince with one or two balls to hit. Everyone was much annoyed when Wright shattered the Prince's wickets with his second ball, and before the Prince of Wales had scored a run. King Edward is the gentleman in the score book seated in the chair on the left of the picture. His Majesty was then twenty-four years of age.

BOOK TALK

They Wouldn't Be Cheesmen by A. B. W. Mason.

The young Nahendra Nao comes to Paris with his "bear leader." Major Scott Caruthers, Nahendra Nao is the son and heir of the Rajah of Chitpur; his father has entrusted to him a rope of priceless pearls one of the most treasured of the state jewels. Nahendra, an innocent and unsuspecting youth, is lured by the Elsie Marsh, a vain and common dancer.

He sends her the pearls to wear, but she loses them. He is in a quandary, for he is a prince and cannot wear pearls, they turn "sick" with the result that they become discolored and lose their sheen.

Major Scott Caruthers comes to the rescue and they are taken from Elsie and handed over to Lyell Flight to "cure."

The Major meanwhile has visited a celebrated jeweller and got him to make an exact copy of the pearl necklace, and has worked out a perfectly planned scheme by which he and the woman with whom he is in love may gain possession of the real pearls, leaving Nahendra with the false ones.

In working out the scheme it is necessary to have the help of more than one person.

The characters in the plot are all gathered together on a household, apparently a pleasant and harmonious party of friends, but there are undercurrents of love, hate and crime, all helping to work up the plot of a truly thrilling story.

What One Girl Wore:

By Betty Brownlee

It's an "off the face" season as far as millinery is concerned, and profiles and foreheads will be revealed in their entirety with the new Fall hats.

There isn't the slightest chance of hiding your hair under a bush with this season's models. The toques, turbans, berets and other chaparrals which found their origin in the Paris salons so far outnumber the brimmed hats that today you'll have to give your profile a careful consideration when selecting the new bonnet.

The general tendency of the new hats is forward, with the brim over the forehead, and this forward movement is further accentuated by trimmings usually in the form of bows which are placed at the front.

Aureole and halo types are also favored, and about the only brimmed hats which will be seen are the small ones of the sports type which incidentally continue to use the shallow crown.

Rich fabrics are employed in the new millinery, with velvets, suedes, broads and even fur, fashioned into the twisted models, which look as though they were draped right onto the head.

There is a definite feeling for bright colored hats, and the materials used for the turban type, such as velvet or velveteen, are particularly effective in the gayest tones. You'll see a lot of scarlet and green, and also the rich purple, effulgent by the current trend toward Renaissance coloring and style.

The following is one of the scriptural quotations contained in the Lesson-Sermon: "While I live will I praise the Lord: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being" (Psalm 146:2). One of the corollary passages from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, is as follows (page 491): "Matter cannot control mortals with the true origin and facts of being, in which all must rest. It is only by acknowledging the supremacy of Spirit, which annuls the claims of matter, that mortals can lay off materiality and find the indissoluble spiritual link which establishes men forever in the divine likeness, inseparable from his Creator."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE At all churches, the subject of the Lesson-Service will be "Matter." The following is one of the scriptural quotations contained in the Lesson-Sermon: "While I live will I praise the Lord: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being" (Psalm 146:2). One of the corollary passages from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, is as follows (page 491): "Matter cannot control mortals with the true origin and facts of being, in which all must rest. It is only by acknowledging the supremacy of Spirit, which annuls the claims of matter, that mortals can lay off materiality and find the indissoluble spiritual link which establishes men forever in the divine likeness, inseparable from his Creator."
